Biography

I am a clinical neuropsychologist with professional knowledge of the behavioral, social, and health sciences. Over the past ten years, I have worked as faculty at multiple Universities and as Behavioral Scientist in the Division of Violence Prevention at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. In these positions, I have worked collaboratively with federal agencies, grantees, contractors, and community stakeholders to identify modifiable risk and protective factors for violence, and to develop and evaluate public health programs that integrate behavioral strategies to prevent violence and associated injury and disease. I have significant expertise in research design, implementation, and analysis including evaluation of programs for both efficacy and effectiveness via clinical trials. Additional unique skills include the integration of neurological, psychiatric, and behavioral data and theory into public health programs; development and administration of psychometric assessments for the purposes of evaluation at multiple levels of the social ecology; managing data sets and conducting advanced statistical analyses; and oral and written communication of research findings via presentations at national scientific conferences and publication of research findings in peer-reviewed scientific journals. In addition, I am experienced in professional consultation and conducting collaborative research with grantees, contractors, community stakeholders, federal agencies, other research centers, and academic institutions. My training in clinical therapy and experience as a collegiate lecturer have honed my communication skills, making me adept at interacting and communicating scientific and behavioral expertise to a variety of individuals and groups with varying levels of professional knowledge.
